Grey Cup bash a success for city

► Huddletown's location, family-friendly activities were key to 2010 festival ► Alouettes defeat the Roughriders for second straight year in 98th Grey Cup

► Als quarterback Anthony Calvillo hoists the Grey Cup after Montreal's 21-18 win at Commonwealth Stadium last night. Calvillo announced after the game that he will undergo surgery soon to have a lesion in his throat removed. He says doctors told him biopsy results on whether it was cancerous were inconclusive. More coverage, pages 3 & 24.

All those who came to party are now leaving, but 2010 Grey Cup Festival organizers glad they provided a great time — for the entire family.

"It was so cool just to see the little kids and (all) the things they could participate in; it's not just a giant drinking affair anymore," said Marty Forbes, festival media liaison. Money raised from the rides will be donated to the Canadian military, a number Forbes expects could reach $20,000.

Events and team gatherings were held throughout the city over the weekend as an estimated 200,000 came to Edmonton.

"When you get to Grey Cup time, it's Canada's game," said Forbes. "It was just fun to see everybody partying regardless of where they came from." ■ HEATHER MCINTYRE

Council votes to bring Indy back in '11

The Edmonton Indy will return in 2011, after city council voted to approve a $3-million deal on Friday.

The city will contribute $2 million from new parking revenue and local businesses will chip in the rest.

The deal will relocate the track to the east side of the City Centre Airport. The runway closed last summer will be part of the track and will be a parking lot the rest of the year.

It is expected that a deal between the city and Octane Racing will be signed this week.

Man dies in snowmobile accident

A European man visiting Canada is dead following a snowmobile wreck in Strathcona County on Saturday.

The man, in his 40s, struck a barbed-wire fence in a rural field near Range Road 245 and Highway 14, according to police.

RCMP as well as Strathcona Emergency Services responded to the scene at approximately 3 p.m.

The man, who was wearing a helmet, sustained serious upper-body injuries and was pronounced dead at the scene.

Operator inexperience is believed to have been a factor, police said.

Fans show true colours

► Spirit of Edmonton shines through sea of green at Commonwealth Stadium ► All CFL team hues were worn with pride at 98th Grey Cup

HEATHER MCINTYRE
EDMONTON@METRONEWS.CA

No one would have called the Montreal Alouettes the underdog team heading into yesterday's Grey Cup.

But their fans may have felt like underdogs amidst the estimated 45,000 Roughriders fans that helped fill out a sold-out Commonwealth Stadium.

"(There's) too much green. Really, too much green," said Leo Drolet, in town from Montreal for his seventh Grey Cup in a row. "But football fans are really good fans. I think they're the best fans in the world."

Drolet wasn't the only one not from Edmonton enjoying the tailgate festivities before kickoff, but many host fans kept their tickets despite the home team not making the big game.

"(We came) just to show pride and spirit in Edmonton in general," said Louanne Lohnes, in attendance with her husband, Gary. "And to watch a good football game."

Eskimos' fan Dave Trithart had a hard time watching Montreal and Saskatchewan fans have a chance to cheer on their teams for the hardware but was excited to experience his first Grey Cup.

Lauren Hills, at her second, figured Saskatchewan was the second best choice

Hospital to roll out 20 transition beds: AHS

279 The beds announced for Edmonton and Calgary this week are in addition to the 279 that were already announced this year.

By tomorrow, there will be 20 new transition beds at the Royal Alexandra Hospital, as Alberta Health Services (AHS) aims to relieve pressure in emergency rooms.

"(Transition beds) are intended for patients who no longer require acute or hospital based care," said AHS's Tadra Boulton.

Those in transition care are still assessed based on their needs, whether they are for long-term, community or assisted living care, or heading home.

Boulton said the transition beds are one piece of a system that needs strategies implemented in order to help patient flow. The new beds will free up some acute care beds, although long-term care beds and facilities are still needed.

"We can't do it all overnight," she said.

An additional 29 beds will open in Edmonton in the new year, and 32 will open up in Calgary.

The Edmonton portion will cost $9.4 million.

A total of 80 staff will be hired as a result of the expansion, including nursing staff.

On the Canadian prairies, only Edmonton's Royal Alexandra Hospital offers the treatment option.

More woe for Haiti with chaotic election

- Man shot to death at a polling place in Artibonite
- Several deaths in recent weeks due to political clashes

Nearly all the major candidates in Haiti's presidential election have backed a statement calling for the cancellation of yesterday's election.

The statement read to a cheering crowd also calls for people to take to the streets to protest allegations of fraud.

Candidate Anne Marie Josette Bijou read the statement on behalf of 12 of the 19 candidates.

They accuse current President Rene Preval of favouring candidate Jude Celestin of his Unity party.

Election trouble

Those on the ground in Haiti predicted a chaotic election day.

► More than 4.7 million voters are registered on electoral lists. Monitors with the United Nations acknowledge that hundreds of thousands are people who died in the earthquake. Preliminary results were not expected until Dec. 7.

There are widespread reports of people unable to vote. Many have been told their names are not on voter lists.

It is not yet clear whether the problems are due to fraud or merely a result of disorganization following the January earthquake.

With most poll stations opening late, observers from dozens of parties crowded voting areas and furious voters were turned away from stations where poll workers could not find their names on lists. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

IMMIGRATION

Flunk rate for citizen test jumps

Failure rates for immigrants writing citizenship tests have soared since the spring, when tougher questions and revamped rules made it harder for newcomers to become Canadian.

The new test, introduced March 15, was based on a bulked-up citizenship guide released a year ago to give immigrants a richer picture of Canada's history, culture, law and politics.

The 63-page guide, Discover Canada, replaced a slimmer volume dating from 1995 that had fewer facts to memorize. The failure rate for the old citizenship test, with questions drawn from the smaller guide, ranged between four and eight per cent. Failure rates for the new test, however, rocketed to about 30 per cent when it was first introduced — prompting officials to revise the rules to avoid a raft of appeals clogging the system.

Latest leaks show u.S. diplomacy

► WikiLeaks releases more than 250,000 U.S. State Department cables in defiance of White House ► As many as 2,648 documents refer to Canada

The revelations

Hundreds of thousands of documents leaked yesterday revealed a hidden world of backstage international diplomacy.

Foreign Affairs Minister Lawrence Cannon called a massive leak of U.S. documents "deplorable" yesterday.

The leak "may threaten our national security," Cannon said in a statement.

The criticism came as several news outlets began publishing American diplomatic cables obtained by whistleblower website WikiLeaks. Soon after, the cables were available to the public at wikileaks.org.

The documents touch on everything from the release of Guantanamo Bay prisoners and Iran's military capabilities to Libyan leader Moammar Ghadafi's eccentricities and U.S. efforts to spy on United Nations officials.

A total of 1,948 cables originating from U.S. diplomats in Ottawa and hundreds of others from various consulates appear to be among the leaked materials.

WikiLeaks confirmed yesterday there would be as many as 2,648 documents that refer to Canada.

The vast majority of these cables are not expected to become public until sometime this week, but the website offered some hints about the broad range of topics they cover: arms control, CBC coverage, energy technology, Haiti, military nuclear applications, provincial affairs and Syria.

One of the few documents released yesterday to mention Canada described a 2009 meeting, which Ben Rowswell attended, the representative of Canada in Kandahar, who joined in asking about the credibility of Afghan elections.

► Leslie Nielson, star of Airplane! and Naked Gun films, dies aged 84 in Fort Lauderdale Leslie Nielsen, who traded in his dramatic persona for inspired bumbling as a hapless doctor in Airplane! and the accident-prone detective Frank Drebin in The Naked Gun comedies, died yesterday in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. He was 84.

The Canadian-born actor died from complications from pneumonia at a hospital near his home at 5:34 p.m., surrounded by his wife, Barbaree, and friends, his agent John S. Kelly said in a statement.

"We are saddened by the passing of beloved actor Leslie Nielsen, probably best remembered as Lt. Frank Drebin in The Naked Gun series of pictures, but who enjoyed a more than 60-year career in motion pictures and television," said Kelly.

Sun TV news gets go-ahead

Canadians are about to get a third 24-hour English-language cable news channel, and it's one that plans to shake up the industry.

The CRTC approved a five-year licence for Sun TV news service Friday — referred to by critics as Fox News North — to go into direct competition with CBC's News Network and the CTV News Channel.

The federal regulator's green light was considered a sure thing after Quebecor Inc. dropped its request for a special licence that would have required cable and satellite carriers to offer the service.

The Category 2 competitive licence means Sun TV will need to negotiate with cable and satellite carriers for a place on their lineup. Sun TV head Luc Lavoie said he expects the channel will begin airing some time in March with a combination of hard news and "straight talk" featuring well-known personalities.

Big banks in good health

► Earnings to increase by up to nine per cent for year

The big news on the Toronto stock market in the days ahead will be a slew of fourth-quarter earnings reports from Canada's biggest banks, which are expected to paint a healthier picture of Canada's financial institutions.

Royal Bank of Canada, Bank of Montreal, TD Canada Trust, CIBC and Scotiabank and National Bank of Canada are scheduled to report their fourth quarter earnings over the next two weeks.

The banks' capital markets divisions — which were a big drag on bank earnings in the prior quarter — are expected to show an improvement in the three months ended Oct. 31.

But the banks' strong domestic foothold in consumer banking provides the foundation for robust earnings growth, said Jonathan Popper, assistant vice-president and senior portfolio manager at MFC Global Investment Management.

"Canada's been in the sweet spot, our real-estate market has been strong, interest rates are low," he said.

However, TD Bank and Royal Bank of Canada could see less significant growth than their peers, dragged by operations in the United States. THE CANADIAN PRESS

TERENCE HARDING

It's a business truism that the best loss to take is the first one.

Apparently, the panjandrums of the public purse in Edmonton have never heard that saying. After losing money on the first Indy, they went back to the public trough for more and are getting ready to do so again.

To date, we have plowed about $12 million into the Indy and now the fans of fiscal folly want to put another $3 million into it. And if I understand it correctly, that's on top of $5.5 million worth of sponsorship and $1.5 million of free police, transit and other services.

The feds have backed out because they only wanted to help fund the Indy if it could be shown to be sustainable. We couldn't do that, so no more money from them. I think that's a smart move. I can't help but wonder if our inability to make the Indy work had something to do with Ottawa's decision not to back Edmonton's bid for the Expo.

At the very least, our inability to get the numbers for the Indy right allowed them to say with some authority that we underestimated the security costs and the like. But having the feds say the Indy isn't worth investing in is not going to stop our civic masters of moolah from keeping on keeping on. Apparently, we are all about beating a dead horse in this city.

The amount of money that has been wasted on the Indy can be put into sharp focus when you look at the kind of funding the city provides for festivals in the city. For 2010, the Edmonton Folk Music Festival received the princely sum of $130,000. LitFest received $12,000. The Heritage Festival got $55,000. And the Ice on Whyte Festival got a paltry $5,000. Given that the grant numbers did not change, the amount of money we put into the Indy would provide grants for our festivals for almost the next 14 years.

So here's my question. Do the taxpayers of Edmonton really want the Indy? I know people attend the event, but is it more worthy of financing than the Folk Festival or the Works?

If you don't think so, you might just want to send your councillor an email indicating that you don't want them to approve any additional expenditure for an American vroom-vroom festival.

"Given that the grant numbers did not change, the amount of money we put into the Indy would provide grants for our festivals for almost the next 14 years."

Worth mentioning

Sometimes a dress is just a dress. But not in Kate Middleton's case.

Her wedding dress will be the symbol of her transformation from commoner to princess, from Kate to Catherine, and define her image to billions of people as they watch her exchange vows with Prince William next spring.

This dress must be elegant, memorable and perfectly fitted. There are delicate balances to be struck: Modern but traditional; alluring but not too sexy; classy but not overly opulent — more grown up than Princess Diana's famous meringue confection, with its puffy sleeves and 25-foot train.

Whatever the ultimate choice, expectations are sky high. Middleton has natural good looks and a radiant smile — people seem to wish her well, even if she will be able to afford a dream dress that is far beyond most people's reach.

"I'm not sure if she could pull off a Diana dress, but it would be great if she had something that magnificent," said Mary Alders, 32, a secretary who is looking forward to the royal wedding. "Whatever it is, everyone will want it. I can see it as silk, maybe some beading. It definitely will be spectacular." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Going offline to plug people into awareness

- Celebrities to support World AIDS Day by signing off Twitter, Facebook
- Aiming to raise $1 million

Alicia Keys and Lady Gaga take charity work seriously, and they're going offline to prove it.

Gaga, Justin Timberlake, Usher and other celebrities have joined a new campaign called Digital Life Sacrifice on behalf of Keys' charity, Keep a Child Alive. The entertainers plan to sign off of social media platforms like Facebook and Twitter on Wednesday, which is World AIDS Day. The participants will sign back on when the charity raises $1 million.

"It's really important and super-cool to use mediums that we naturally are on," Keys said in a phone interview from New York last week.

For the campaign — which also includes Jennifer Hudson, Ryan Seacrest, Kim and Khloe Kardashian, Elijah Wood, Serena Williams, Janelle Monae and Keys' husband, Swizz Beatz — celebrities have filmed last tweet and testament videos and will appear in ads showing them lying in coffins to represent what the campaign calls their digital deaths.

"It's so important to shock you to the point of waking up," Keys said.

The foundation, which began in 2003, will accept donations through text messages and bar-code technology, which is featured in the charity's Buy Life campaign. Raised efforts support families affected by HIV/AIDS in Africa and India.

"We're trying to sort of make the remark: Why do we care so much about the death of one celebrity as opposed to millions and millions of people dying in the place that we're all from?" said Leigh Blake, the president and co-founder of Keep a Child Alive.

When she began recruiting others, not one person said no, Keys recalled.

"I have a feeling that Gaga is going to raise it all by herself," Blake said. Lady Gaga has more than 7.2 million followers on Twitter, and nearly 24 million fans on Facebook.

"She's got a very, very mobilized fan base and that's beautiful to watch I think (and) she's able to draw their attention to these issues that are very important, you know, and that people follow it and act."

Fefe finds her voice

In the seven years since Fefe Dobson last released an album, she's largely swapped her punky style and snarl for a more mature look and radio-ready pop polish.

And she doesn't feel like she has to apologize for the change, drastic though it may seem.

"I started writing my first record when I was 17, I'm 25 now," Dobson said in an interview at a downtown Toronto pool hall this week. "If I was the same person as I was when I was 17, there'd be a problem. There'd be a really big problem."

"I'd still be wearing — well, I don't know, what I was wearing then. And some of that stuff wasn't good, that's all I can say."

The past seven years weren't all necessarily good for Dobson, either.

Two early singles failed to chart and the record never came out. In 2006, she was dropped from her label, Island/Def Jam, and she had to start again as an indie artist.

Dobson is actually now back with the same label that dropped her four years ago. But she says she's found her voice over the past few years, adding: "I stopped trying to be like other people."

Butt-kicking women of NCIS

► Cote de Pablo & Pauley Perrette play the only crime-fighting women on the show ► Both say that they relish in their roles and characters ► Pauley Perrette plays forensic specialist Abby on NCIS.

NED EHRBAR
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

Being the only girls in the crime-fighting world of NCIS can be daunting, but series stars Cote de Pablo and Pauley Perrette insist the familial atmosphere of the show — now filming its eighth season — keeps them from feeling left out.

In fact, de Pablo says the combination is just right. "It's very rare when you have a top-rated show," says the actress, who joined the cast in the third season.

"If you were to take out any of these characters, you would be messing with the chemistry."

Playing Ziva, a former Mossad agent, calls for more than a few stunts, which de Pablo relishes. "Nothing gets me more pumped than a really good fight sequence," says de Pablo.

There are risks, of course. "At a certain point, you may get hurt," she says. "Certainly, I've had injuries. The simplest things are the ones that hurt you."

"I did one fall and my neck was basically shot for about two weeks."

Perrette's role as forensic specialist Abby isn't nearly as physical, but it instead calls for something of a mental workout.

"I have probably four hours of studying to do tonight," she says. "The things that Abby has to say, there's no way to do that without studying."

"I've got props and microscopes and mass spectrometers and so many things to do that if you're not super-prepared, I don't think there'd be any way you could play Abby."

Both actresses have found strong relationships to play off of with their male co-stars, especially with series star Mark Harmon, who plays NCIS supervisor Leroy Gibbs.

"I've always, always felt that their relationship was so incredibly paternal" Perrette says of Abby and her boss.

Gibbs lost his daughter, Abby doesn't have a father, and that right there lays the groundwork for that relationship."

For de Pablo, the paternal feelings apply as well, especially since she was a later addition to the cast.

"I really think that Ziva has found a family in this agency," she says.

But for as much as Harmon's character offers fatherly comfort on-screen, the show's lead actor is more like an obnoxious little brother off-screen.

"Pranks happen all the time on our show," de Pablo says.

There was even one involving an already-dead lizard, a noose and a note.

"On the noose there was a note saying, 'I couldn't take it anymore.' The amount of thought that goes into that it's a Mark Harmon prank," she says.

A sitcom time capsule

TV can be time machines to another era, and a perfect example is The Mary Tyler Moore Show.

The '70s sitcom is among several currently airing on the CTV-owned specialty channel Comedy Gold.

The station offers old school sitcoms like Murphy Brown and Fresh Prince of Bel Air. How much you are attached to each show depends on how old you were when you first saw them.

What is fascinating about The Mary Tyler Moore Show today is that it is seldom laugh-out-loud funny.

The appeal of the show, about a single woman trying to "make it on her own" in a TV newsroom, completely eludes my 17-year-old who was raised on The Simpsons.

The grip Mary Tyler Moore still has on Boomers is due to the cast.

For viewers who grew up with the series, watching it today is like flipping through an old family album.

Mary Richards (Moore), Mr. Grant (Ed Asner), Murray (Gavin MacLeod), Rhoda (Valerie Harper), Phyllis (Cloris Leachman), Ted Baxter (the late Ted Knight) and, later in the series, Sue Ann Nivens (Betty White) seem like old friends.

Many in the cast are actually still working in TV. Eight-time Emmy-winner Leachman, 84, is a regular on Fox's Raising Hope. Asner, 81, is shooting the new comedy Working Class for CMT. White, 88, has had the greatest late career renaissance of all, with Moore, 73, joining her for a guest stint in the New Year on White's comedy Hot in Cleveland.

What isn't in vogue is the pacing. Scenes go on for five minutes and there are few set changes.

TV moves faster today, with more commercials per half hour. The quickness seems tailor-made to suit today's shorter attention spans. What can be lost, however, are those little moments that stick in your mind years after a show has gone off the air.

The Mary Tyler Moore Show found a way to take a nothing day and make it all seem worthwhile — a comedy blueprint that never seems to go out of style. THE CANADIAN PRESS

INXS seek new Fortune

► Band tears apart old songs for new album ► Re-imagines them on new Original Sin with Canadian singer

A new collection of reinterpreted INXS classics really resonated with J.D. Fortune — not to mention his neighbours.

"I almost got evicted because of the Drum Opera," Fortune laughed in a recent telephone interview, referring to the propulsive opening track on the new disc, Original Sin, which comes out Tuesday.

"I was in my condo here in L.A. and I had the landlord himself — who lives in another building — come up and tell me to turn it down."

"I played the Drum Opera like six times in a row and drank the biggest glass of red wine you've ever seen. He's like, 'Man, I hate to bother you, but we've had some complaints. Three miles away.'

Fortune

What really happened?

► Star Fortune shot to stardom when he won the television reality contest Rock Star: INXS in '05 and became the new frontman for the band. Later that year, he sang on the group's record, Switch, which topped the Canadian charts. But after nearly two years of touring behind the record, Fortune claimed the band dumped him at a Hong Kong airport, leaving him to live out of a truck, a story the band denied.

You might want to turn that down."

Indeed, restraint wasn't really on the menu when the band approached this project, seeking instead to twist their familiar songs into unrecognizable new shapes.

Fortune, the Mississauga, Ont., native who has been an on-and-off again member of INXS since winning a reality TV show in 2005, sings one track on the album (The Stairs) but will take the lead vocals once again for their upcoming Australian tour.

For the rest of the record, the Aussie band — whose original frontman Michael Hutchence died in 1997 — enlisted a variety of guest singers, including Ben Harper, Rob Thomas and Tricky, for the 12-track album.

Author Christian Lander says he's still shocked by the success of his megahit blog-turned-book Stuff White People Like.

"I'm a little neurotic — I sort of always assume for the worst — so I didn't think the first book was going to do well. I was super nervous. And then it did well and I was amazed they let me do a second one," he said.

That second book is Whiter Shades of Pale, a humorous look at regional differences within North American white culture.

"The Toronto white person is urban and stylish, and you could say that they are exactly like the New York white person — of three years ago," Lander, a Toronto native, writes in the new book.

Lander describes white Montrealers as: "one of the

"The Montreal white person can speak perfect French and is probably in a son on the whole West Coast."

"They have out-yogaed Los Angeles, out-Asian-fetished San Francisco, and out-outdoored Seattle. All three are nearly impossible tasks and yet Vancouver has been able to pull them off!" Lander wrote.

"The only activity you won't find them engaging in is work."

Lander's first book was a bestseller. His website has received nearly 75 million hits.

"I've been completely surprised that I've been able to do it, I'm really, really lucky, it's been awesome," said the author, who lives with his wife in Los Angeles.

As for whether there'll be a third book, he's not sure and says he hasn't started writing one.

► According one author, Elvis – the king of rock 'n' roll – was more of a pop singer than we may think

 ADRIANA RIVERA
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

Music criticism may not always be the most fun reading material on which to get your hands.

But that changes when it's written by Will Friedwald.

Friedwald passionately and entertainingly chronicles some 300 artists — the masters of jazz and popular music — in his new book, A Biographical Guide to the Great Jazz and Pop Singers.

"The idea was to talk about the singers who have done the American Songbook and place them on a level playing field.

"I didn't want to make divisions between so-called jazz singers and pop singers and Broadway singers," Friedwald says about bringing together various genres.

But the biographical histories of these iconic American musicians are not limited to those of the past.

It's artists such as Jamie Cullum, Michael Bublé and Harry Connick Jr. who represent the newer side of the musical spectrum, according to Friedwald.

"Music is going in all kinds of directions," Friedwald says.

"There's a lot of great contemporary people out there."

Friedwald also includes an extended section in the book containing short biographies of musical greats from other genres such as rock 'n' roll, blues, gospel, country and folk rock.

"One of the conclusions I came away with was that Elvis was more of a traditional pop singer than you might think."

"Obviously, he was the king of rock 'n' roll, but he was the last one in the continuity of Bing Crosby and Frank Sinatra."

A Biographical Guide to the Great Jazz and Pop Singers was released this month to very positive reviews.

► Author Will Friedwald says Elvis was more than the king of rock. He was also a pop star.

Raising children in the limelight's glare

For celebs, bringing up kids can be daunting. Their kids' clothes and hairstyles face constant tabloid scrutiny. But Hollywood moms like Katherine Heigl say the 'overwhelming love' for a child is the only thing that matters.

NED EHRBAR
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

Being a parent is tough enough, but the glare of the limelight can complicate things, with the paparazzi, the pre-school politics and the increased risk of screwing up your kids.

"It's one of those things I think that you just have to dive in blindly," says Katherine Heigl, who recently adopted a baby girl from China with husband Josh Kelley.

"It's that overwhelming love that makes us want to procreate. No one would do it otherwise as it is just so intense."

Perhaps the single most famous Hollywood mom, Angelina Jolie, has been learning firsthand how hard the celebrity spotlight can be on children: Her daughter, Shiloh, has become a subject of tabloid attention herself at just four years old thanks to her unconventional hairstyle and boyish clothing choices.

"She likes to dress like a boy. She wants to be a boy," Jolie told Vanity Fair. "So we had to cut her hair. She likes to wear boys' everything. She thinks she's one of the brothers."

But should what a toddler wears be fodder for magazine covers just because she's the daughter of famous actors?

Since Hollywood can be a pretty strange place to begin with, a lot of celebrity parents do their best to make things as normal as possible for their kids.

"I still take my kid to school every day and put him to bed every night," says super-busy producer and director JJ Abrams. "I don't work on weekends."

Showbiz: The next generation

Long before Macaulay Culkin smacked the after-shave on his cheeks in Home Alone, kids have been stealing the show in Hollywood. And while childhood stardom can often lead to less-than-savoury adult lives, some have managed to be successful on both sides of their 18th birthday — Elijah Wood and Jodie Foster come to mind, among others.

Metro takes a look at some promising youngsters who look like they can avoid the True Hollywood Story treatment. ■ NED EHRBAR

Chloe Moretz

After slicing apart bad guys in Kick-Ass and sinking her teeth into unsuspecting adults as a vampire in Let Me In, 13-year-old Chloe Moretz might be a little intimidating to some people. But the refreshingly down-to-earth actress insists there's nothing to be scared of. "I'm just a normal 13-year-old girl," she says. And while some might worry about Moretz taking on such gruesome material, she's very good at discerning reality from fantasy. "It was all acting. It was making up a character that I'm not," she says of her work in the bloody Let Me In.

Jaden and Willow Smith

When your parents are megastars Will Smith and Jada Pinkett Smith, it likely doesn't take much to get used to the spotlight. After stealing scenes from his dad in The Pursuit of Happyness, 12-year-old Jaden became a movie star in his own right this summer with his The Karate Kid remake, co-starring Jackie Chan.

But before he could enjoy the attention, nine-year-old sister Willow came along to steal it with her surprise hit single Whip My Hair. Imagine what they'll do when they hit puberty.

Callan McAuliffe

At 15 years old, Australian Callan McAuliffe is already breaking hearts after starring in Rob Reiner's Flipped this summer as one half of a 1960s teen romance.

And his profile is about to skyrocket with his next role in the hotly anticipated I Am Number Four, based on the teen sci-fi novel.

But just because lots of people have been seeing his work, that doesn't mean McAuliffe has as well. "I hate watching myself, as do a lot of actors," he says.

Kodi Smit-McPhee

Like his Let Me In co-star Moretz, 14-year-old Kodi Smit-McPhee has been dealing with some hefty adult themes. He first won acclaim as the Boy in last year's adaptation of Cormac McCarthy's bleak The Road before romancing a vampire this year.

Luckily, he's had concerned adults around to help shield him from some of the mature subject matter. "We always remained protective of Kodi as a crew," says The Road director John Hillcoat. "There was a lot of black humour; you can imagine the jokes about cannibalism."

Eggs for dinner, with style

LARRY CROWE/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

► Brie and sourdough bread give 'egg on toast' a new sophistication

There are those nights when breakfast is the only way dinner is going to get on the table.

But that doesn't doom you to a bowl of cold cereal in front of the television. There are plenty of easy ways to add a dinner-like sophistication — or at least satisfaction — to your breakfast staples. And that was the inspiration for this rich and cheesy take on eggs and toast.

I started with a thick slab of sourdough pan-toasted in butter. If you insist, you could cut the fat by using olive oil cooking spray in the pan instead. Then I added an egg to the pan and a slab of brie to the bread. When the egg was cooked, but the yolk was still a bit runny, I placed it on top of the brie.

And I called it dinner. And it was scrumptious in an almost disturbingly

Ingredients:

- Start to finish: 10 minutes
- 15 ml (1 tbsp) butter
- 1 thick slice sourdough bread
- 1 egg
- Salt and ground black pepper, to taste
- 1 thick slab brie (about 60 g/2 oz)
- 1 sprig fresh thyme

good way.

It got me thinking that this same dish could be re-cast as a finger food for holiday parties, too. For that, I would roll out a bag of pizza dough as thinly as possible, brush it with some olive oil or melted butter, then pop it in the oven. When it was nearly cooked, pull it out, top it with brie and crack a few eggs on it, then return it to the oven until the eggs are ready.

► Pan-toasted sourdough with brie and fried egg.

Toasty Brie and Egg

Preparation:

- 1 In a large skillet over medium-high, melt butter.

- 2 Place bread in skillet and toast until bottom is crispy and just turning golden, 3 to 4 minutes. Flip bread to toast other side, pushing it to one side of the pan. Crack egg into other side of pan. Season it with salt and pepper.

- 3 About 1 minute before egg is cooked to desired doneness, place brie on bread. Use a spatula to transfer egg, sunny side up, onto brie. Cover skillet and cook for another minute. Garnish with thyme and serve immediately. Makes 1 serving.

Meet our new water creatures

- Researchers comb through oceans to find thousands of new animals
- Discoveries range from 'furry' crabs to 'bone-eating' marine worms

 ELISABETH BRAW
LIFE@METRO.CA

Ten years ago, 95 per cent of Earth's oceans remained unexplored. Now, experts are unveiling an unprecedented inventory of ocean life.

First, meet the Yeti Crab. It has hairy claws and reproduces its own bacteria, and is one of more than 5,300 new species discovered by the Census of Marine Life. Some 2,000 researchers from 80 countries set out to document every species in our oceans.

"We knew that there were unknown species in the oceans, but we didn't know if it was one, 10 or 100 million species," says Dr. David Billett from Britain's National Oceanography Center. "Off the British coasts, only an estimated 10 per cent of species are unknown. But off the coasts of countries like Angola, the figure is 90 per cent."

Experts found almost 200 new crabs, shrimps and prawns. "Rainforests have a reputation for biodiversity, but most of the species are insects," explains Prof. Paul Tyler, a marine scientist from Southampton University. "By contrast, there's an extremely wide range of animals in the ocean."

Billett discovered new sea

cucumbers, a common marine animal in the Indian ocean. "The deep waters aren't dull places where nothing happens."

The most charming discovery may be the osedax, discovered by the Monterey Bay Aquarium Research Institute in California. This seabed creature looks like a wig with pink twigs sprouting out. But the osedax's diet proves to be less enchanting: it feeds on whale bones.

TOSS TOXIC MAKEUP

Queen of Green

LINDSAY COULTER

SEND YOUR QUESTIONS TO
QUEENOFGREEN@METRONEWS.CA
DAVIDSUZUKI.ORG/BLOGS/QUEEN-OF-GREEN

Question: I had a look at the list of 12 ingredients the David Suzuki Foundation suggests I avoid in my cosmetics. Now that I've found toxic ingredients like fragrance and parabens in almost everything, I'm not sure how to dispose of the products I no longer want. I don't want to pour them down the drain, so should I take them to the dump?

Lisa of Toronto

Identifying the "Dirty Dozen" ingredients to avoid in your cosmetics and personal-care products is a huge first step in going green.

Now that you've done your homework — reading the fine-print ingredient lists with their numerous complex chemical names — it's natural to want to turf everything overnight.

And you're not alone. Almost 80 per cent of products reported in our spring survey contained at least one of the "Dirty Dozen" ingredients. They are that widespread.

When it comes to disposal, you were right to question how to dispose of them.

One option is to consider finishing up what you have and then buying a safer alternative without harmful ingredients next time.

If you'd rather stop using your products today, find out if your city considers personal-care products to be household hazardous waste. The City of Toronto's website, at toronto.ca/garbage, has some helpful information about disposing of unwanted household hazardous waste.

No matter where you live, check out your city's website for more tips on disposal.

A final option is to take a stand and mail your product back to the manufacturer.

Include a note explaining your reason, and then ask them to sign the Compact for Safe Cosmetics.

Edmonton and Area Land Trust Partners With Melcor

The new Larch Park development is breaking ground soon and Edmontonians will have the opportunity to envelop themselves in a community focused on green developments, natural preservation and a relationship with nature and neighbourhood.

One of the interesting aspects about the Larch Park development is its commitment to the unique environment it merges into. Melcor, the developer for the region, took the initiative to work with conservation organizations in the city to protect the hanging wetlands and park area adjacent to the development.

Melcor's goal was to incorporate the natural landscape with the new community. One of these organizations is the Edmonton and Area Land Trust (EALT).

Pam Wight first came in contact with Melcor three years ago when they approached the EALT to have the land preserved for the benefit of the immediate residents and citizens.

Wight and other members of the Land Trust are keenly aware of the unique ecosystem adjacent to the development area.

"We are particularly interested in that land because it is so special," said Wight.

"We were extra-delighted to discover that the developers themselves were proposing a very green development. It's a pleasant surprise and yet doesn't surprise me just because of how much they've been going to bat working with us."

Keeping the land protected in perpetuity means the land is safe from future development and will have higher safeguards protecting the area and its vicinity.

"They used volunteers a great deal, and are efficient with scarce resources when it comes to stewarding, making sure weeds are minimized as well as monitoring," said Wight.

One of the surprising outcomes of the relationship between Melcor and EALT is a program developed by King's University College and Wight. One of the professors from the college contacted EALT about finding a project for a group of environmental students that has meaning for them.

"In effect, the students are learning how to do consulting work through a project. They're being given something that matters and has volume," she said.

Wight has also spearheaded an online gallery for the Edmonton area that showcases the artwork and photography of local enthusiasts passionate about our natural landscape.

Youth tackle climate issues

► Young Canadians head to Cancun for UN climate talks ► Younger voices look to add perspective on the importance of dealing with environmental issues now ► Worried that green issues get ignored by politicians

Jonathan Williams says for young Canadians there is an odd mix of optimism and frustration as they try to tackle the daunting challenge of climate change, despite some recent political opinions cooling to the idea.

The 22-year-old student is preparing to be a "voice" for teens and 20-somethings as global policy makers meet for UN climate talks at the end of the month.

"Young people are going to have to be dealing with this situation for the rest of (their) lives," said Williams, adding the consequences of global warming will be left for his generation to clean up, if nothing is done.

"Whether or not we'll be heard by policy makers now, I can't say," he added.

Williams is among a group of 29 young Canadians between 18 and 29 years old who will attend the United Nations Climate Change Negotiations (COP16) in Cancun, Mexico, at the end of November as part of a non-partisan youth delegation. Representatives from more than 190 countries are expected to attend, and the goal is to produce a blueprint for a new climate deal to replace or complement the Kyoto Protocol.

But heading into the summit, which runs Nov. 29 through Dec. 10, the political climate on addressing the environment has been rather chilly.

Jim Prentice resigned as than a month before Canadian delegates head south.

In the U.S., a Republican mid-term victory dashed hopes for climate change legislation, following a sentiment among many stateside that climate change isn't the No. 1 priority.

And officials on both sides of the border have been playing down a deal in Cancun.

"A lot of the time people look at the political issues and they don't see the environment as something that's cross-cutting, that affects everyone," said Emilie Novaczek, 20, another youth delegate, originally from Breadalbane, P.E.I., but now attending school in Halifax.

Novaczek called it "distressing" that the environment is frequently "dropped" as a political issue.

"I think that happens all the time," said No-vaczek, citing the U.S. as an example. "(U.S. President Barack) Obama had to choose between health care and climate change, basically."

During the conference, Novaczek and her peers will try to spread awareness about what's negotiated and say they will let Canadians back home know about their country's position.

The group will also submit policy proposals and positions, arguing there needs to be sufficient money so there are no loopholes in measuring, reporting and verification when it comes to an agreement.

Russell Peters' degree

► Comedian gets an honorary degree for his observations on race, class and culture ► Admits school wasn't important for him

School was never a strong point for Toronto's claim to comedic fame – the irreverent Russell Peters.

Yet, the multimillion-dollar grossing comic, whose brazen critiques of ethnicity and class capture international audiences, finally got a degree.

Well OK, it's an honorary one. He didn't have to take any tests to get it, but still.

The School of Creative and Performing Arts at the Humber Institute of Technology and Advanced Learning recently presented him with an honorary degree for his keen observations on race, class and culture, and for his support of young talent.

This year, Peters launched a $20,000 scholarship for a student from his former high school, North Peel Secondary, which focuses on technical skills and trades.

Metro Toronto caught up with Peters by email and asked him for his thoughts on the award, the importance of education, and his advice for aspiring performing artists.

What did you think when you heard the Humber School of Creative and Performing Arts was giving you an honorary degree?

I thought, "Wow, that's pretty cool!"

But at the same time it's kind of ironic considering I didn't go to college and just squeaked through high-school.

When you were in school, what did you think you'd be when you grew up?

When I was 14, I wanted to be a breakdancer.

That was it, just a breakdancer.

What was the most important lesson you learned in school?

That the cool people in school aren't the cool people when you're finished school.

The cool crowd becomes the "tool" crowd.

Had your parents chosen a career path for you?

No, they didn't lay anything out for me. We were very working class, so my parents just wanted me to get a steady job, like a union job or something where there was security.

What did they think of you not going to college?

About becoming a comic instead?

They were fine with me not going to college – there was no pressure.

They didn't really understand what becoming a comic meant.

► Russell Peters, centre, receives an Honorary Degree from the Humber Institute of Technology and Advanced Learning.

I might as well have said that I was going to be an astronaut. They were like, "That's nice, son..."

You didn't need higher education to be successful and have a rewarding career, yet you recently developed a scholarship for a high-achieving student planning to go to college.

Why do you think education is so important?

For me it wasn't important.

I felt like the system wasn't really made for kids like me – I had ADD and needed extra help, but the teachers were more focused on the kids who were "getting it," instead of the kids who weren't.

That all changed when I switched schools and went to North Peel Secondary. That was the first time I felt like I fit in and that the teachers took the time to pay attention to kids like me.

Texting students, irritated pros

► Smartphones in classrooms are driving teachers – and students – to distraction, suggests new study

When his professors drone, Dan Kautz whips out his phone.

Kautz, a senior at Wilkes University in Pennsylvania, might send a text message to someone across the room — “I can’t wait to get out of here” — or make plans with his roommates. He’s become so adept at texting during class that he can tap out a message without even looking at the screen, making it appear as if he’s paying attention to the instructor when he’s really chatting with his girlfriend.

“Every single person I know texts in class at least occasionally,” said Kautz, a communications studies major from Pelham, N.Y.

It’s no surprise that high school and college students are obsessive texters. What alarms Wilkes psychology professors Deborah Tindell and Robert Bohlander is how rampant the practice has become during class: Their recent study shows that texting at the school has surpassed doodling, daydreaming and note-taking to become the top classroom distraction.

The phenomenon is part of a broader revolution in the way young adults communicate. Most prefer texting to email and certainly to talking on the phone, Tindell said.

Indeed, most view texting as their right.

Almost all the students surveyed by Tindell and Bohlander said they should be allowed to have their phones in class. And a clear majority — 62 per cent — said they should be allowed to text in class as long as they’re not disturbing those around them. About one in four said texting creates a distraction.

Tindell instituted a no-texting policy as a result of the study, which has been presented at a pair of academic conferences. She tells students that if she even sees a cellphone during a test, its owner gets an automatic zero.

One Syracuse University professor has taken an even harsher stand.

Laurence Thomas, a popular philosophy professor whose courses have waiting lists, walked out on his class of nearly 400 students last week when he caught a couple of students fiddling with their phones instead of paying attention to him.

It wasn’t the first time Thomas has cut a class short because a student broke his no-texting rule. To Thomas, texting saps the class of its intellectual energy.

“My job is to engage the class, to give them stuff to think about,” he said. “They need to respect that.”

While Thomas keeps his eyes peeled for illicit texters, Tindell said most professors are likely as clueless as she used to be about the ubiquity of in-class cellphone use. Many of the surveyed students said their professors would be shocked if they knew about their texting habits.

Chelsea Uselding, 20, a Wilkes junior from Chicago, sends an average of 150 texts a day. But she’s the rare student who doesn’t text during class — viewing that hour or two as a “nice break” from the phone and its unceasing demands on her time and attention.

There’s also a practical reason why Uselding, a dual major in psychology and international studies, idles her thumbs.

“I’m paying all this money to listen to the person speak, and I figure it’s a waste of my time if I’m not going to be listening,” she said.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Everybody does it

The anonymous survey of 269 Wilkes students found that nine in 10 admit to sending text messages during class — and nearly half say it’s easy to do so undetected. Even more troubling, 10 per cent say that they have sent or received texts during exams, and that three per cent admit to using their phones to cheat.

Avon Cobourne shut the door on the Saskatchewan Roughriders.

Cobourne ran for two touchdowns, including a key two-yard scamper, to power the Montreal Alouettes to a compelling 21-18 win over Saskatchewan in the 98th Grey Cup yesterday.

Cobourne helped Montreal to a second straight Grey Cup win over Saskatchewan following last year's stunning victory. In the 2009 final, Damon Duval missed from 43 yards out on the final play, only to get a second chance after the Riders were called for too many men on the field.

Duval then hit from 33 yards out to give Montreal the 28-27 win.

Montreal earned its third Grey Cup win in eight appearances since 2000.

Despite several trips to the final and two straight titles, Alouettes coach Marc Trestman wasn't about to call his team a dynasty.

"We decided early on we weren't going to be the defending champions nor would be in a position to repeat as a team," Trestman said. "The guys bought into it, they truly believed that they had to earn it on their own merit. We went up against the best that the league had for us and were able to find our way through adversity much of the time."

Montreal receiver Jamel Richardson, who caught eight passes for 109 yards, was named the game MVP while Saskatchewan defensive lineman Keith Sholongan was the top Canadian.

Richardson, who put up over 100 yards for the third straight Grey Cup, was the first receiver to win the MVP award since Edmonton's Jason Tucker in 2003.

"It's not about me, it's about those guys in the locker-room," Richardson said.

"I didn't do it for me, I did it for them. That's all that mattered going into the game, doing it for the next person. That was our thing going into this game."

With Commonwealth Stadium again a sea of Roughriders green, the Riders stayed in the game due to a Duval miss. With Montreal up 21-18, Duval couldn't connect from 41 yards out.

Saskatchewan returned the ball to its own 16-yard line with roughly 90 seconds remaining, giving the sellout gathering of 63,317, a Edmonton Grey Cup record, a wild finish.

Saskatchewan pulled to within 21-18 on Darian Durant's one-yard TD pass to

"I'm really proud of my players. We battled a really good Montreal team."

ROUGHRIDERS COACH KEN MILLER

Marc Parenteau at 11:52 of the fourth. It was set up by a 31-yard reception by Andy Fantuz to put the Riders on the Alouettes' one-yard line.

Montreal countered by driving to the Saskatchewan 33-yard line, only to have Duval miss and give the Riders another chance. But there would be no comeback victory as Billy Parker intercepted Durant's desperate toss at the Saskatchewan 37-yard line with under 56 seconds remaining. It was the only turnover of the game.

Calvillo says he has lesion in throat

Grey Cup winning quarterback Anthony Calvillo says he will undergo surgery in the next few weeks to have a lesion in his throat removed.

Calvillo says doctors found the lesion after he was hurt in a game against Winnipeg earlier this year.

He says they told him biopsy results on whether it was cancerous were inconclusive, but they told him he could finish out the year.

He says the surgery will see half of his thyroid gland removed.

If the tests come back as being benign, Calvillo says he could be ready to play football next year.

Matt Bryant kicked it right between the uprights, then he did it all over again.

The second one counted, giving the NFC-leading Atlanta Falcons a 20-17 win over the Green Bay Packers in a game yesterday between playoff contenders that lived up to the hype.

Bryant's second-chance 47-yard field goal — the Packers called timeout just before he made the first attempt — with nine seconds remaining capped a bruising defensive struggle filled with huge fourth-down plays, pushing Atlanta (9-2) to its fifth straight win. It's Atlanta's longest winning streak since 1998 and assures a third straight winning season for a franchise that had never even had two in a row before this run.

Of course, the Falcons have much higher aspirations sitting atop the conference standings with five weeks to go.

Aaron Rodgers guided Green Bay (7-4) on a 90-yard drive to tie the game with 56 seconds remaining. He converted a pair of fourth-down passes, including a 10-yard touchdown pass to Jordy Nelson that made it 17-17.

But Eric Weems broke loose on the kickoff return and was dragged down by Matt Wilhelm with a facemask tackle. The Falcons took over at the Green Bay 49, Matt Ryan completed four straight short passes and Bryant made the winning kick.

Michael Turner, who rushed for 110 yards, put the Falcons ahead 17-10 in the opening minute of the fourth quarter.

Today's horoscope

For today's crossword answers and for expanded horoscopes, go to play@metronews.ca

♈ Aries March 21-April 20

You'll do anything to escape a situation you find restrictive in the extreme. But in fleeing one prison, you may find yourself trapped by another. Bide your time.

♉ Taurus April 21-May 20

Sometimes it hard to share information, even when you know that you should. Today, be open with everyone you meet, especially if there is money at stake. Honesty is by far the best policy.

♊ Gemini May 22-June 21

You're warned: If you try to force your will on other people today your strategy will backfire. It could also be you who ends up being moved around like a pawn or a puppet on a string.

♋ Cancer June 22-July 22

When dreaming, make sure you have at least some chance of reaching the goals you set. Some things are simply beyond your powers to manifest at the moment, so don't get carried away.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 23

No matter how hard you try, you can't seem to get through to certain people. It's as if there is a wall that cannot be moved. Perhaps you should take the hint and stop trying so hard.

♍ Virgo Aug. 24-Sept. 22

You may be tempted to move things along at a faster pace today but is that such a good idea? Speed does not necessarily equate with success. Control your impatience.

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23

Setbacks and delays are to be expected over the next 24 hours, and people's nerves are sure to be frayed. Don't add to a negative situation by losing your cool as well.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22

Don't let your guard down today because there are people out there who are waiting for a chance to take advantage of you, emotionally as well as financially. Stay alert to what is going on around you.

♐ Sagittarius

Nov. 23-Dec. 21 Today it will be difficult for you to get motivated — either that or you will try too hard and act too quickly and make a costly mistake.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20

You are looking forward to starting something new, but you are fearful that you will get it wrong and look silly. Don't worry: it will be a huge success — with huge rewards.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18

Make the best possible job of what you are asked to do today, even if it is something you have never attempted before. Act as if there is not the slightest doubt that you will be brilliant.

♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20

Has someone in a position of power got it in for you? Maybe, but even if they have there is no reason why you should be worried.
